Intervention on Sarah Kane's Crave

*Brusa Paola Zerbinani

Abstract: Based on the play Crave, written by the English playwright Sarah Kane, this text creates a scene in which fragments of this specific play and fragments of studies written about the author's work and life are connected in order to promote a discussion about Kane. Instead of creating an academic essay to achieve this purpose, we decided to use the aesthetic form of Crave and some of its speeches to make an intervention on the play.

Keywords: Sarah Kane, English drama, Crave.

A: We invite you for an exercise that can be difficult.

B: Kane says: What I can do is put people through an intense experience.

A: But difficult things must not be avoided.

B: Maybe in a small way from that you can change things.

A: Sarah Kane's theatre IS difficult.

B: There isn't anything you can't represent on stage.

A: We are going to speak about Kane's theater and Kane's play Crave

B: If you are saying that you can't represent something, you are saying you can't talk about it, you are denying its existence. My responsibility is to the truth, however difficult that truth happens to be.

A: The form we chose is the form in which Crave is staged.

B: The element that most outrages those who seek to impose censorship is form

A: a fragmented play in a time of fragmentation.

B: (looks at A) That's a fragmentary explanation!!!

A: But first, let's contextualize.

B: And the advice?

A: Ok, we are quoting all the time

B: The impossibility of being completely original...

A: When Sarah Kane's first play Blasted was staged in 1995, it provoked the kind of critical backlash not seen in British theatre since the 1960s.

B: What is the reason for such visceral reactions?
