

Teaching notes

The Oxford Primary Skills series is designed to be used alongside a coursebook to develop reading and writing skills, and uses a balance of familiar and new language in different contexts.

Each level of Reading and writing is made up of ten units that are designed to be used in order. The texts progress in length and the skills practised progress in difficulty through the book. The units follow a grammar and vocabulary syllabus designed to be consistent with what the children are learning in their language lessons.

Reading

There are a variety of reading text types through the course to expose children to different types of English in use. Children will be motivated by their ability to read and understand 'real' text types such as websites and magazine articles that have been graded to their level. Children develop the skills of reading and listening for gist and detail, both of which are essential for complete communicative competence.

Some of the text types they will encounter are, amongst others: stories, magazine articles, advertisements, leaflets, websites, projects, reference book articles.

Writing

In the Writing section of each unit, the children practise punctuation, syntax and text structuring, and are given the opportunity to write different types of text closely following a model text that will support them in structuring their writing. Their writing confidence will develop as they find they have written, amongst others: letters, descriptions, instructions, projects, diary entries, website profiles.

More words

At the back of the book is an optional section of vocabulary extension exercises that can be used to augment the number of words the children learn in each unit from six to eleven. The extra words are consistent with the topic of the unit and can be used by children to complete the activities in the Writing task at the end of each unit.

It is to be stressed that these words are optional and it is perfectly possible to complete the course without using this additional section.

Tour of a unit

Each unit is topic-based and the topics are consistent with areas the children will be covering in their English language coursebooks and in other subject areas. The units are structured to offer the children support in developing their reading and writing skills. Every unit follows the same structure:

Reading and Comprehension pages 1 and 2 of each unit

The six new words are introduced in picture form at the top of the first page. Use the pictures to teach the words which will form the basis for the Vocabulary work in the unit and will also appear in the Reading text.
